Our Corporate Giving

Our corporate contributions are focused on making people's lives healthier and safer. Our primary focus is on making life-changing, long-term differences in human health by targeting the world's major health-related issues. The Company works with community-based partners that have the greatest insight into the needs of local populations and the strategies that stand the greatest chances of success.

Our giving focuses on:

- Saving and improving the lives of women and children.
- Building on the skills of people who serve community health needs, primarily through education.
- Preventing diseases and reducing stigma and disability in underserved communities where we have a high potential for impact.

Diverse teams of Johnson & Johnson senior executives around the world provide guidance on our charitable contributions efforts. A Corporate Contributions Committee provides overall strategic guidance, and regional committees meet regularly to make "local" funding decisions based on a global strategy and unique needs in their communities.

Giving Across the Corporation

Our 250 operating companies around the world also participate in charitable giving. These companies may support local voluntary health groups, arts associations, service or civic organizations and many other types of non-profit organizations.
